officially took over from the civilian government in Iran yesterday as students occupying the U.S. Em-basey threatened to kill their 60 American hostages if Washington tried to free them by force.

Revolutionary leader Ayatolah Khomeini said in a statement accepting the resignation of Prime Minister Mehdi Bazargan and his ministers: "I have assigned the Revolutionary Council to run the affairs of the country during the transitional period."

The secret council is dominated by Iran's powerful Moslem clergy. It finally seized the reins of power from a government whose weakness was underscored by its inability to control the occupation of the em-bassy by student supporters of the

Saunders optimistic on Palestinians

Jerusalem Post Correspondent

WASHINGTON. — U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Harold Saunders yesterday optimistically raised the possibility that Palestinian and other Arab leaders might yet come around to support the Camp David peace

"Signs exist that the Palestinians and other Arabs are watching the negotiations closely, that they are carefully considering their next steps, and that a certain sense of realism is emerging in parts of their relationship," Saunders said in a speech in St. Louis.

The assistant secretary did not specify which Palestinians and other Arabs might be moving in this direc-tion. But diplomatic observers said that Saunders' remarks were consistent with a widely-held view in the State Department that the PLO may yet be prepared to meet America's long-standing minimal conditions for recognition.

Weizman, Sharon buffet Begin on Eilon Moreh

Jerusalem Post Reporter

With a fortnight to go before the Eilon Moreh group must pack its bags and quit the site under the High Court judgment, Prime Minister Menahem Begin found himself in a cleft stick yesterday morning, squeezed between Agriculture Minister Ariel Sharon and Defence Minister Ezer Welzman.

The double squeeze was timed to coincide with the meeting of the Ministerial Defence Committee charged with finding the controversial Gush Emunim settlement group a fresh site in place of Ellon Moreh Weizman said he would resign if any attempt were made to evade implementing the High Court's order to evacuate Eilon Moreh.

Sharon, a member of the topsecret committee, said 10 days ago he would attend no meetings conven-ed to discuss the Issue of alternative sites. He kept his word, but he acted to bring his point of view home to the committee in two ways.

Sharon telephoned Begin around 8.30 a.m. and aired his opinions about the proposals which the Defence Ministry had prepared for the committee. These proposals, which involved two sites, were cynical, totally unsuitable, and calculated to provoke Gush Emunim into a campaign against the govern-ment, whose end result would be to topple it, Sharon warned. The Eilon Moreh group would not go to either site, he predicted.

Sharon had hardly put the receiver down when the report of his side of the telephone conversation was fed to Israel Radio. Sharon apparently knew his dramatic conversation would lead the 9 a.m. news and the ministers would listen.

In the afternoon, the bill was laid on the table for its second reading. Law Committee Chairman David Glass presented the bill, and opposition members explained their histäyguyoi.

It was the nearest thing Israel's parliament has to a filibuster, but not the real article since the deputies are limited in their speaking time. But there was an attempt by the opposition to slow up the coalition steam-roller by submitting so large a number of histayguyot to a bill consisting of a single sentence.

Another proposal was that the applicability of the law be limited "to the period in which Knesset Member Simha Ehrlich serves as a of the Knesset. Deputy Speaker Moshe Meron rejected the motion, but this was followed by a shouting match between Gross and Alignment deputies that led Meron to call Gross to order three times.

Little was added in the course of the afternoon's debate to what had been said during the first reading on Monday. Several opposition deputies denounced the action of the House Committee on Monday, even before the bill was tabled in the Knesset. TEL AVIV. -- Monday's compromise decision to delay the Knesset vote on the amendment to the abortion law has caused considerable displeasure in the rank and file of Agudat Yisrael.

Party pundits say that if the imendment is not passed when the delayed vote takes place in a few weeks, the Aguda MKs may feel the consequences. If the "social clause" is not abolished, the Council of Tora Sages may be compelled to instruct them to leave the coalition, which they are reluctant to do, these sources sav.

The party's MKs are under fire for not linking Knesset vote manoeuvring on the abortion amendment to the government reshuffle. Party members feel an opportunity was lost, especially since the coalition MKs were mobilized for the reshuffle legislation vote and this could have been exploited for a vote on the abortion amendment.

But the Likud thinks that since the vote is likely to be extremely close it would be better to hold it when some of its opponents, specifically in the ranks of the Liberals, could be absent. Likud sources feel at least five Liberals will not be persuaded to change their opposition to the amendment. The best chance for the coalition to overcome the hurdle would thus be to persuade them to absent themselves from the vote.

Sadat promises one year of oil at OPEC price

and Agencies

CAIRO. — Egypt has agreed to sell Israel two million tons of Sinai oil for one year at the OPEC ceiling price, instead of the higher spot market price, President Anwar Sadat sald in an interview yesterday. Sadat's announcement was virtually identical to reports circulating in Jerusalem last night of the substance of the agreement reached on Monday by the Egyptian president. Defence Minister Ezer Weizman and Energy Minister Yitzhak Moda'i.

Sadat was speaking to a group of journalists and experts preparing a radio programme on the Middle East for the British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC).
They quoted Sadat later as saying there was no problem between Egypt and Israel on the question of oil purchases from Sinai wells which Egypt will recover from Israel later this month.

Sadat said he had told Weizman on Monday that Israel could buy up to two million tons of Sinai oil at the OPEC ceiling of $23.50 a barrel for one year. After that, Sadat told them, Israel could buy two million or more tons at the spot market price currently around $32 a barrel.

Mustapha Khalll last night denied the reports that Egypt would sell oil to Israel at a reduced price.

"There will be no concessions" Khalil affirmed in a telephone conversation with the Associated Press. He was commenting on the BBC reports. "They must have misunderstood the president," Khalil said.

"Israel will buy Egyptian oil at the rate set by the auctions. These are our terms. This is our position," Khalil said, adding it will take effect as soon as Israel decides to buy. Khalil said Egypt, not being a member of OPEC, is not bound by the $23.50 price. Egypt sells its oil to the highest bidder after taking into consideration "the price of the crude it exports versus the price of oil products" it imports, he added.

Israel has opposed paying the spot price for Sinal oil throughout the lengthy negotiations on the issue. When Weizman and Moda'i came back from Cairo this week, the defence minister spoke of a 'breakthrough' having been effected in their talks with Sadat. Observers thought this meant the price dispute had been resolved, (Continued on page 2, col. 1)

Finance minister-designate Yigal Hurvitz, scheduled to win final cabinet and Knesset confirmation today, already faced mounting problems yesterday as the public, alarmed by rumours of devaluation and a reimposition of foreign currency restrictions, rushed to sell government bonds and buy cash - in any denomination and of any nationality except Israel pounds.

Of this amount, IL300m. were bought by the Bank of Israel, which intervened to prevent a collapse in the bonds' price. In the last week, the central bank has bought some IL1b. worth of the certificates, and as a result, bond prices have remained virtually unchanged. Hurvitz yesterday reiterated his denials that he intends to change the terms under which bonds are bought and sold or levying a tax on them. "A word is a word," he said, appealing to the public not to panic by following the lead of speculators.

Associates of the treasurer-to-be accused the banks of instigating the panic by selling massive quantities of the bonds, with the intention of encouraging sales of their own stocks and inflating their profits on foreign currency transactions.

Hurvitz remained silent, however, on any changes be may be planning in foreign currency rules. Nissim gives up plans for Information Ministry slot

By DAVID LANDAU and SARAH HONIG

Minister without Portfolio Moshe Nissim (Liberal) announced vesterday that he would not after all, take up a newly created post of informa-tion minister. "The conditions are not right at this time for the creation of an information ministry," Nissim explained after a lengthy meeting, the second in two days, with senior officials of the Foreign Ministry.
The Foreign Ministry, led by Director-General Yosef Ciechanover, impressed upon Nissim their view of the integral nature of information (hasbara) in the work of the ministry. The Foreign Ministry's information section was to have been the pillar of the new information ministry.

On Sunday, Education Minister

Nissim would have been left with only the Government Press Office and a number of small units. There were voices within the Liberal Party demanding yesterday that Nissim be given another portfolio to

The Liberals are now joining the National Religious Party in decrying what is seen as the DM's overrepresentation in the Government. The DM has only seven MKs not all of whom vote with the government while the Liberals have 14.

While the Liberal Party scethes with resentment, the feeling at party headquarters yesterday was that nothing will be done yet about the party's new grievances for fear that any Liberal move at this juncture would send the government's frail house of cards tumbling.

Laker charters to run on weekly schedule

By MICHAL YUDELMAN Jerusalem Post Reporter

BEN-GURION AIRPORT. - The Laker Airways charter line between Israel and Britain will operate according to a fixed weekly schedule, just like scheduled airlines, announced Sir Freddie Laker, who arrived yesterday afternoon on the inaugural flight of the new line.

Laker, who is known as the pioneer of cheap air travel, arrived on a 345seat DC-10 with his wife, an entourage of 45 and some 300 tourists from Britain. Also aboard were four leading British tour operators who, together with the Israeli company Maof-Charter No. 1, have leased the Laker Airways aircraft for the year.

The Laker rates include a roundtrip flight, transportation to and from the airport, hotel accommodation and flight cancellation insurance for £149. (IL9,536). Laker said yesterday that the goal of his low-price charter flights was to force air companies to lower their fares. He said the current fares are about double the amount they should be, according to the real flight cost.

Commenting on the new El Al and British Airways lines between Tel Aviv and London operated as of this week for £130-£135, Laker, said he was "delighted. Cheaper fares bring more tourists which means more cake for all of us to share."

sent to lower his fares, which he believed were quite competitive.

Laker said that if conditions prove favourable, he hopes to increase his flights between Israel and Britain to a daily schedule.

Maurice Segal, one of the British tour operators, accused El Al and BA of running their charter flights at a loss, with the sole intention of undermining the Laker charter flights. He called upon El Al to join the effort to lower air travel fares instead of fighting against it.

An El Al vice-president, Otto Herstik, yesterday denied the charge that El Al was losing mnoney on its flights to England. "It is quite acceptable to reduce air tares during the winter season, when the number of passengers is reduced," he told The Jerusalem Post.

Herstik said the British tour operators should be pleased with El Al's low prices. "Laker says he wants scheduled airlines to cut their prices, so he should have no complaints," Kerstik said.

Alan Elsner adds from Tel Aviv: El Al spokesman David Eilat said vesterday that all El Al's operations are approved by the government and therefore no unethical practices could be involved. "Would you rather we ran a loss on empty planes at high prices, or a loss on full planes at low prices?" Ellat said.

Radio head calls for probe in 'leftist blacklist' allegation

Israel Radio director Gideon Lev-Ary yesterday ordered a probe into reports that news department head Amos Goren made a list of the political views of department staffers, indicating members of a so-called "leftist mafia" among them. Lev-Arv also got the support yesterday of department heads in a dispute with the Broadcasting Authority which, he feels, is preventing him from exercising his authority.

Both issues came to a head through the appointment of Jerusalem Journalists Association chairman Yitzhak Allon, a radio staffer, to the post of coordinator of radio reporters after an internal tender. Both Lev-Ary and Goren were against the appointment, but for different reasons. Lev-Ary argued that the post itself is unnecessary, seeing its creation as a further example of the Broadcasting Authority's higher officials overriding him.

Lev-Ary, who took on his post about six months ago, has threatened to resign several times since then in protest over his 'lack of authority." He has felt that his hands are tied by senior authority officials, especially director-general Yosef Lapid, who nominated him for the Goren, meanwhile, denies the existence of the alleged memorandum on the political views of radio staffers (which was taken up in the Knesset yesterday by MKs Chaika Grossman and Yossi Sarid). He also denies newspaper reports that radio reporter Avi Bar-Yosef had made the list and Goren had handed it to right-wing authority board member Aharon Papo over a year ago. He says the allegation was made because some reporters were angered by his opposition to the appointment of Allon.

Hurvitz had been reported as favouring Labour and Social Affairs Minister Israel Katz in the role of the DM's representative in the "inner cabinet" since Katz's ministry is one of the largest recipients of government money and the economic crackdown under consideration could affect the ministry severely. Yadin also wants to have Justice Minister Shmuel Tamir as his stand-in and, although he himself is deputy prime minister in charge of social affairs, he wants Katz to take part in deliberations involving Likud and National Religious Party sources say that this is an attempt to get all the DM ministers into the committee through the back door. It's bad enough, they say, that the DM is "over-represented" in the cabinet, given its size in the Knesset. Tamir, meanwhile, is reported to be eager to serve on the committee himself. Herut circles close to Housing Minister David Levy say they would welcome such a development. If Katz is out, Levy would be a natural spokesman for the di taged population and would press hard for welfare expenditures. Perhaps the toughest in fighting is in Levy's own Herut Party. Hurvitz is reportedly interested in having Agriculture Minister Ariel Sharon in the committee. Sharon is said to favour stringent economic measures and his ministry also represents powerful economic interests.

Another Herut minister who would like to see himself inside the "inner cabinet" is Defence Minister Ezer Weizman, whose ministry spends the largest chunk of the GNP.

SAS to fly Israeli drugs to Kampuchea

Jerusalem Post Reporter

A large shipment of antibiotics and other drugs donated by the Ikapharm and Teva pharmaceutical firms will be flown to the Kampuchean border on Sunday.

The Broadcasting Authority reported last night that El Al had persuaded SAS (the Swedish airline) to fly the shipment to Thalland for free. The drugs were donated in addition to the more than IL13m. collected by Israel TV for the Kampuchean refugees. A representative of TV House will fly to Thailand next week with the collected money to purchase food and other supplies for the sick and starving in the camps. The authority spokesman noted that expenses for the trip will not come out of the donated funds. If TV decides to send a TV team to cover the story on the Kampuchean border, expenses will be paid by the Broadcasting Authority, the spokesman asserted. Contributions to the TV's refugee fund may be deposited in Bank Hapoalim account number 7000

TEL AVIV. - Ramat Gan Hapoel hoopsters last night completed a double over Amical Luxembourg, scoring a comfortable 99-83 victory in the European Cup for Cupholders return game at the Yad Eliahu sports stadium.

Ramat Gan won the first game abroad by 105-91.

The Ramat Gan team cruised to the 16-point margin in the second half after the Luxembourg squad trailed by only 48-46 at half time, and at the start of the second half actually evened the score at 48-48. The home squad took the game much too casually until midway through the second period.

Al Fleming, Hapoel's American reinforcement, played though suffering pains in his right hand. However, Steve Kaplan was out with injuries. Steve Shlachter was top scorer with 36 points, 24 scored in the first half. Top scorer for Luxembourg was Burns, with 37 points.

Factionalism rears its head once again in Labour Party

By SARAH HONIG Post Political Reporter

TRL AVIV. — With everyone in the Labour Party "out to fight everyone else" - according to a prominent party source - Labour seems to be girding itself once again for a new round of internal strife.

The planned second session of the Beit Berl gathering on Saturday night has already sparked plans for a counter-gathering. Party doves plan to hold a second session of their meeting last month, which prompted stiff criticism from bawks and centrists in the party.

The Beit Berl meeting is expected to be a larger version of the original meeting, which set off anxiety in the party about a possible challenge to the traditional leadership. With powerful kibbutz movement heads and prominent managers of Histadrut concerns attending, the first Beit Berl gathering organizers said they were not siding with any party faction. But observers saw it as a search for a new power base inside the party.

Organizers of the event reiterated this week that party "personnel" issues will not be the focus of the gathering, which will instead deal with "the problems of the state." No resolutions are planned.

However, the very announcement of plans for a renewed gathering at the party's ideological institute has prompted opponents of such "internal gatherings" to hold what they are billing as a counter-gathering in Tel Aviv next week.

The last time the opponents of the Belt Berl group gathered, they ex-pressed confidence in party Chairman Shimon Peres and came out against factionalism inside the par-

Haddad, UN trade threats

Jerusalem Post Reporter

METULLA. - The UN is beefing up its presence in the central sector of Southern Lebanon, including armoured personnel carriers armed with rockets and manned by the Dutch UNIFIL contingent.

Observers linked the UN redeployment in the area to a growing dispute between Major Sa'ad Haddad and UNIFIL. Haddad wants to reinforce his militias inside the beleaguered village of Beit Yahoun, which has been the target of terrorist attacks in the past. But UNIFIL demands that Haddad's men keep out of the area. Haddad yesterday said he was closing the area to UN forces, which set up bazooka and mortar emplacements around the disputed area. Haddad's men got past UNIFIL blockades into the village.

Despite reports of mounting tension in the area, guns were silent in Southern Lebanon yesterday.

A reporter from the Beirut daily "An-Nahar" told The Jerusalem Post that the terrorists and their allies are threatening UNIFIL that they will "explode" the fragile situa-tion if UNIFIL lets Haddad's men into the village. Meanwhile, a source close to Haddad denied that his men attacked six Irish soldiers manning a post near s Haddad-held position. A UN spokesman in Beirut had issued a statement charging that 30 Haddad militiamen had attacked an Irishheld position.

Doctors want 'lobby for better Israel' also discuss the proposed National Health Insurance Law. The new wage demands of the doctors will be on the agenda for the 283 delegates. Their present wage contract expires in April 1980. Prof. Avraham Atsmon, head of the IMA's scientific council, noted

Soccer chiefs split over foreign coach for World Cup

After Israel's disappointing per-

Hapoel disagrees. "A foreign coach will cost us IL5m. a year, and we cannot afford such an expense. It will only lead to inflated demands for pay increases by local soccer coaches, who are already getting extremely high salaries," Ofek said yesterday.

The Maccabi and Betar organizations are known to support the idea of a foreign coach for the national team. Almog, like Ofek, is affiliated to Hapoel.

With the first world cup qualifying match (against Northern Ireland) only four and a half months away, the appointment of a new coach to take over the national team after the Olympic debacle should be made soon. The new man will need several months of work to build his team and instil a fresh psychological approach into the players for the eight World Cup qualifying games.

Dubek head honoured Navon launches 1979 Cancer Society drive

By JUDY SIEGEL Jerusalem Post Reporter

President Yitzhak Navon, whose own family has been struck by cancer, opened the Israel Cancer Society's 1979 fund drive last night by wishing that the organization be disbanded at the soonest possible date — when cancer has been eliminated and there is no longer a need for the society.

The president made only a single, casual reference to his wife Ofira, who is due to return home today after undergoing the implantation of radioactive needles at a Boston hospital following the removal of a tumour in Tel Aviv last August.

"I spoke less than two hours ago with my wife and she feels fine," he told 250 society volunteers and donors. "If her doctors permit, she will attend an international conference in Mexico in two weeks." Mrs. Navon was invited by the wife of Mexican President Lopez Portillo to take part in a parley of all wives of heads of state who have chaired their country's International

Year of the Child activities. Suzy Eban, the society's president. noted that the rapid development of more sophisticated equipment puts a great strain on the budget of the voluntary organization.

Industrialist Benno Gitter, the head of the 1979 "Knock on the Door" campaign, said he hopes to raise more than the targeted IL15m. next Tuesday when thousands of volunteers will make the rounds for the cancer society. Last year's campaign, headed by Yiarael Pollack of Pollack of Pollack netted 11.10.5m.

Prof. Natan Trainin, deputy chairman of the society, predicted that "in the foreseeable future," new ways of combating cancer - including immunology — will be added to the existing methods of surgery.

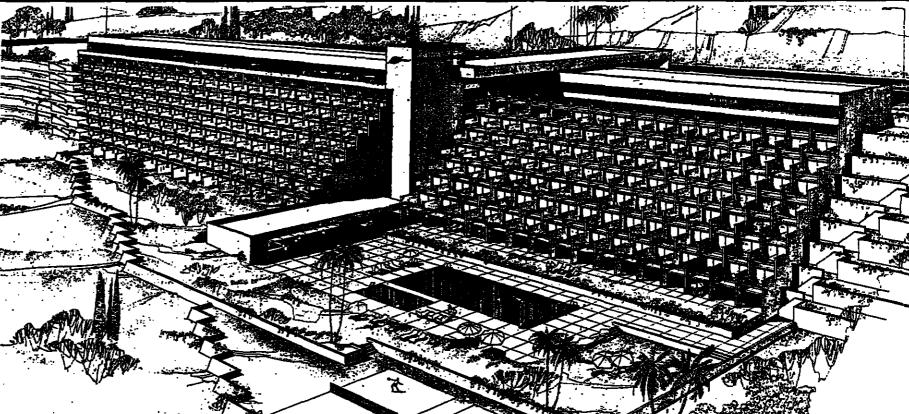

chemotherapy. Scientists are currently preparing for the immunization of people against primary cancer of the liver — which is not widespread in Israel. Someday, he said, it might be possible to study a drop of a person's blood to determine if he has cancer. "It still remains a dream."

A score of society supporters received certificates — including Martin Gehi, chairman of the executive council of Dubek, the giant tobacco company. 'The society really should award a special prise to Mr. Gehl," joked Navon, "The society is fighting against his livelihood."

Gehl told The Jerusalem Post later that his company has supported the society since it was founded 20 years ago. "We think it's a very fine organization; we just don't think that their anti-cigarette propaganda is effective or fair. Of course, "he admitted, "I wouldn't advise a young person to start smoking. But telling an adult amoker to stop is like telling someone to stop drinking or eating. It should be done in moderation."

The society should instead publicize what kinds of cigarettes (high tar and nicotine) to stay away from, how many and when, instead of telling everybody to stop. After all," said Gehl — who has been smoking for "60 years" —"every year Israelis smoke more cigarettes.

HOMELESS. A Jerusalem family of four demonstrated in front of the Knesset yesterday and said they would refuse to move until provided with suitable housing. According to the young couples point system, they explained, they should be provided with an apartment for II.2,800 a month rent.

Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim, who presided over a dayions conference at which the promises of emergency aid were announced on Monday, said he was gratified by the response of world governments.

Bolivian chief won't step down

LA PAZ, Bolivia. - Colonel Alberto Natusch, the right-wing army officer who seized power last week, dashed hopes for a quick solution to Bolivia's bloody power struggle on Monday by declaring he would not step down.

Natusch said in a speech on government radio and television that assertions by some congressmen that he would surrender power to congress were "absolutely false."
"With sincerity and firmness we will not permit the nation to become enslaved by predatory terrorism,". the self-proclaimed president declared. Natusch turned downtown La Paz into an armed camp yesterday but failed to end a crippling general strike that exploded in violence on Monday killing at least 50 civilians. Natusch posted troops at 20-metre intervals throughout the downtown area before dawn to back his pledge to end the strike. But a lack of public transportation kept most workers away from their jobs. Banks and most major offices remained closed.

Censors prevented UPI and the French news agency AFP from filing stories over public telex. Censors also cut the AP leased line. Although thousands of civilians yesterday milled through central La Paz, there was no repetition of Monday's violence.

Chicago supports Kennedy; Carter wins Iowa straw poll CHICAGO (UPI). - Sen. Edward

Kennedy's presidential bid has won the official endorsement of Chicago's influential Cook County Democratic Central Committee in a meeting devoid of any mention of supporting President Jimmy Carter for re-election.

The commitment guarantees Kennedy the support of the powerful Cook County Democratic machine. Last week Mayor Jane Byrne and committee chairman George Dunne endorsed Kennedy.

But in Iowa, Carter crushed Kennedy in a Democratic Party straw poll over the weekend. Carter pulled 71 per cent of the votes cast in the poll, which is viewed as a key test of the candidates' organizational strength.

SEOUL (Reuter). - South Korean Central Intelligence Agency chief Kim Jae Kyu plotted for nearly five months to assassinate President Park Chung Hee and take over the government, a martial law command spokesman said yesterday.

In the fullest official account yet of the assassination, the spokesman, Major-General Chon Doo Hwan, told a press conference that chief presidential secretary Kim Kae Won was informed of the plan and tacitly approved it shortly before Park was shot dead in a KCIA restaurant on October 26.

The spokesman said that after killing the president, the intelligence chief tried to involve army chief of staff General Chung Seung Hwa, who is now martial law commander, and a senior Korean intelligence official in taking over the country.

A few weeks later, the same medium-sized West German town -Duren, near Aachen — was the scene of another double suicide. Realizing that only through theft and prostitution could they meet the rising costs of their heroin addiction, Siegfried, 26, and his 19-year-old half-sister Renate, wrote their last letters in a woodland hut used as a clubhouse by a local huntamen's association.

"I hope that my life will be a warning you will never forget," wrote Renate to a newly addicted boyfriend. "In that case my death will have a meaning." She hanged herself with her shawl. Her brother cut her down and laid her on the clubhouse sofa before putting a noose round his own neck and tying

TRAGEDIES like these can be found in almost any German town today. When the killer is not a "golden bullet" - an overdose - the death may not register on the official drug

"WE EXPECT to start drilling for oil in the Yellow Sea by 1981." The speaker is Les Roberts, head of a British Petroleum team based in Shanghai. He is sitting on the veran-dah of "The Club," an exquisite English-style country house in its own grounds 10 km from the centre of Shanghai.

It has been the house used by leading members of the Communist Party, including Mao Tse Tung and Chou En Lai, since "liberation 1949; President Richard Nixon stayed there during his visit in 1972. Now it is occupied by the staff of BP and the French oil company Elf. Nothing could better symbolize the return of foreign capital to Shanghai than two of Europe's major oil companies living in the city's finest property.

"The Club", as the locals call it, was built in 1926 by a British banker, Sir David Sassoon, in the style common to the south of England, which was his home. It is set in a beautiful Chinese garden, with small lakes, pagodas and trimmed cypress trees, as well as a large nursery garden. He sold it in 1947 to a Chinese businessman who turned it into a country club, adding a golf course that is now the municipal zoo. BP and Elf leased it at a high rent early this year as the headquarters for their first year of surveying 50.000 square kilometres of sea off the Shanghai coast.

Numerous foreign and overseas Chinese companies are now doing feasibility studies in Shanghai, the city that offers the best facilities for an exporter in China: it is the most port, the most sophisticated work force and some of the country's best universities.

FOUR NEW countries are expected to open consulates there in the next six months, in addition to Japan and Poland there now. These will be the U.S. and probably Yugoslavia, Rumania and another European country. The housing bureau is rezoning the city — for commercial, in-the long-term damage — the deaths in hospital from over-taxed hearts and livers.

But the official figures are stark enough. There were 430 deaths in West Germany and West Berlin in 1978, and this year the figure will be more than 600. With around 60,000 heroin addicts, Germany has become Europe's most drug-beset society; and Frankfurt has taken over from Amsterdam as the main European beroin market.

Britain and France are having their drug problems, too. France has woken up to the fact that it has around 35,000 addicts. But this is still only around half what the Germans have to face.

The most serious aspect of the German scene is the ever-increasing number of addicted schoolchildren. The under-15s are now one of the main targets of the dealers, and the sniffing of glue and paint remover is setting the hook into children of 11 or even eight.

GERMAN POLICE are up against a supply structure far less vulnerable than the French Connection, which was dismantled in 1972, or the Dutch Connection, which the Amsterdam police got the better of in 1977. Among Germany's 1.1 million Turkish "guestworkers" moving to visit their homes are a legion of couriers bringing a more formidable type of heroin back with them.

Turkish honey No. 4, a white powder from the poppy fields of Pakistan and Afghanistan, is both purer and cheaper than the "Hong Kong rocks" which used to make the laborious journey from South-east Asia through Amsterdam.

Heroin seeps relentlessly into Germany in small quantities and is then hidden in many a Turkish home. "We can't examine every car and open every package." says a member of Berlin's hard-pressed drug squad.

Berndt Georg Thamm, a young social worker who runs the Catholic Caritas welfare centre for addicts in Berlin, says: "The over-production from Turkish sources is now so great that dumping has set in. A gramme of heroin used to cost $90 to $130. Now it is down to $50. It's of relatively good quality and the price may drop NOWHERE are the ravages of the Turkish Connection more apparent than in Berlin. The three most populous Turkish cities are in Turkey; but West Berlin is the fourth.

About one-third of the Berlin-based Turks are illegal immigrants and the grug traffic is intense. It is estimated By ROBYN SMYTH/Berlin that, taking into account the difference in the number of addicts, the death rate in Berlin is higher than ir New York.

It has all happened so comparatively suddenly that German public opinion is only now becoming fully aware of the new threat to the family circle. Drugs have taken over from terrorism as the theme of parental anxiety; and as heroin is far more infectious than the example of Baader and Meinhof, it seems a ooor exchange.

There are, of course, millions of happy, normal drug-free German families. But many of these are plagued by at least the shadow of a doubt after the publication of "Wir Kinder vom Bahnhof Zoo" ("We Children of the Zoo Station"). These memoirs of a child addict called Christiane F., taken down on a recording machine and edited by two freelance journalists, are far and away the non-fiction best-seller of marriage broke up, Christiane was regularly beaten by her father. It was with relief that she found acceptance among the teenage gangs of Gropiusstadt, where what the leader said was law and only what was forbidden was worth doing.

A reluctant pot-smoker at 12 to keep up with the crowd, Christiane was swallowing handfuls of uppers and downers and on LSD trips the next year. She sniffed her first heroin a few weeks before her 14th birthday.

Very soon she had joined her 15year-old lover selling themselves to men in the grimy, dimly lit corridors of the Zoo Station close to the bright lights of the Kurfurstendamm, As a change from the station, Christiane went to the crossroads known as the Babystrich - the Baby Beat where teenagers paraded for clients while drug-pushers waited to exchange their fee for the heroin the children had to have to get them through the rest of the day.

The star of the Bahy Beat was Babette — known as Babsi — the daughter of a ballet dancer and stepdaughter of a well-known pianist. She died of a heroin overdose at 14 after fleeing from the last hope of a Christiane's story is that she was able to summon such extraordinary resources of energy and deceit. She was not only an addict with all the inevitable nightmares and timewasting clinical demands: she was also a part-time prostitute, a schoolgirl and a daughter who for a long time persuaded her mother that she was just a liberally brought up modern 14-year-old. The deaths of three friends sobered Christiane. Her mother bundled her on to a plane to Hamburg; and she now, aged 16, has been drug free for a year. She knows that a relapse is still possible. It remains to be seen whether being rich and the semi-anonymous author of a bestseller belos her to hold out.

Supporters of the hard-line believe that addicts can be retrieved only by cutting out of their lives everything that recalls their addiction and every addiction substitute. So they must forgo long hair, trendy clothes and disco music, smoking, sex and for a time letters and family visits. They must rise at dawn and some of the day has to be spent in farm work or other manual labour. The idea is that the addicts have undergone such privations in the service of heroin that only another form of privation will fill the vacuum. The Caritas view is that it is demanding too much, especially of a child, to ask it to choose between a cure and everything that has seemed pleasant in life. Babsi made her choice immediately on arrival. She fled. There is no such thing in Germany as a compulsory cure, even for minors. Within a few weeks she was

ONLY 10 per cent at the most of Berlin's addicts are willing to accept treatment: and Caritas assesses its long-term failure rate at around 80 per cent. So no one yet has the answer. There are demands that .:ddicts should be treated as if they were no longer in control of their lives and forced into recuperation centres. But compulsory therapy has little chance of success if the patients return to the same environment. Moreover, it is hard enough to find therapy vacancies for the few addicts who want to be treated. Prison is not a solution either. Berndi Thamm says sadly: "Drugs are so freely available in our jails that it is even possible to go in a nonaddict and come out addicted."

The police assessment is that a hardened drug-taker needs $50 a day for heroin alone. It can come only from prostitution and theft. The impact on crime statistics is so alarming that the federal court is overhauling its anti-heroin strategy. But there is no doubt in the minds of those closely involved that no real cure is possible without new channels of communication between adults and children.

dustrial and residential use - and blocks to house the new foreigners are being built.

One foreign institution that has been through all this before is the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank. Before liberation, its operations in Shanghai far overshadowed its business in Hong Kong, and it built an enormous domed pile on the Bund, the Shanghai waterfront.

It is now the home of the Municipal Revolutionary Committee and negotiations over compensation took

The bank's representative is Oliver Barnham, and he says he wholeheartedly recommends foreign investors to come to Shanghai.

"Political stability is the most important factor. We feel that China is stable, nobody wants a return to the extremist politics of the past. Every sign is that China is now well on its way to economic recovery

He points to the fact that the Bank of China is now involved from the beginning in evaluating new projects; a year ago it was the passive paymaster following government decisions that were sometimes politically desirable but economically unieasible.

Peking now sends out groups of economists to Shanghai and elsewhere to evaluate factories and close them down if necessary." A large island in the Yangtse River estuary, just north of the city, is under consideration as a tax-free zone, similar to those in Kachslung. Taiwan, Shannon in Ireland, and Shumchun in southern China next to OIL IS ANOTHER part of the Shanghai jigsaw. The Chinese have driven a hard bargain with BP and Elf. The two companies are bearing the total cost, running into millions of dollars, of the survey work and will present the results to the Chinese by the middle of next year. By February 1982, if oil indications are good, the area will be thrown open to competitive bidding by all the major oil companies.

Les Roberts says this is the first time the major companies have accepted such tough conditions. Like other potential foreign investors, he says negotiations with the Chinese are time-consuming and difficult, with many legal and technical words in English having no exact translation in Chinese.

The Chinese prefer short agreements based on mutual trust and confidence: these are not at present satisfactory to most foreign companies.

There are many other obstacles to be overcome — taxation levels, customs duties, and conditions for a foreign national living in China. At the moment he cannot travel more than 15 km. without permission. Entertainment, shopping and recreation are way below the standard most expatriates look for. And, not least, there is the question of ownership. At present, a foreigner or foreign company may not own the means of production on Chinese soil, though he can own up to 100 per cent of the equity in a joint venture. This means that his security has to be a Bank of China guarantee, not the plant or raw material in the factory ined to set up dealt with satisfactorily before China can outbid the other developing countries also after foreign capital. If they can, then Shanghai will be in the vanguard of China's modernization and "The Club" and its lovely gardens may again be host to the rich and famous of many

Next year and in 1981, some $3b, in principal and interest will fall due. ut Poland is still running a trade deficit of around $1.5b. this year, despite strenuous efforts to reduce imports and boost exports. An unexpected purchase of grain, as well as other foodstuffs affected by the poor harvest, will raise the deficit and require Poland to borrow even more to service its debt.

To complicate matters, the harvest shortfall will impose an even sharper reduction on Polish exports of quality food products, which, traditionally, have been one of the country's chief foreign currency

ONE SOLUTION to the food supply problem as well as to the international indebtedness would be for the government to set more realistic retail prices by lifting controls that serve as disincentives to farmers and abolishing the subsidies that are straining the treasury.

But that is a risky undertaking, for Poles get angry when they are hungry, they get even angrier when they have to pay more for food.

That is a lesson Gierek's predecessor, Wladyslaw Gomulka, learned in 1970 when suddenly announced price increases triggered a violent uprising that cost him his job.

It is a lesson Gierek himself learned more power cuts are planned. They are hitting the most crucial industries, such as cement which recorded a 17.6 per cent drop in output for the first six months of 1979 compared to last year, and those that provide Poland's hardcurrency-earning industrial exports. The consensus in Warsaw and

THE ORPHEUS CHAMBER ENSEMBLE Mann Auditorium, Tel Aviv, November 1). Haydn: Symphony No.77 in B Flat Major: Stravinsky: Dumbarton Oaks Concerto in E Fiat Major; Wuorinen: Grand Bamboula; Mozart: Sin-Winds and Strings, K.297b.

THERE can be no doubt that the praise heaped on the "Orpheus" ensemble is fully justified. Indeed, the ensemble deserves much admiration for its unity of conception. impeccable homogeneity of sound, technical skill and unlimited devotion to the common undertaking.

Yet all that does not seem enough to make for exciting performances as the special interpretational traits. tendencies and approaches of the ensemble do not always agree with

Haydn, for example, was performed with unnatural mellowness of tone, an insufficient beat and reduced dynamical contrasts. All this seemed an artificial effort to sound "cultured," restrained and soft, whereas Haydn demands a much sharper attack, a clearcut rhythmical articulation and much more animation. Stravinsky's Concerto was an even stronger indication that inter-pretational ideals cannot be applied blindly, A neo-classical Stravinsky definitely cannot be played with a "beautiful." mellow, 19th century cantabile tone. It needs harshness. resolution and, above all, pin-pointed rhythm and complete tonal objec-

The ensemble's interpretational ideals seemed less disturbing in Charles Wuorinen's "Grand Bamboula," a composition of considerable originality. But only Im Mozart's Sinfonia did "Orpheus" really come to terms with the music. There was remarkable classical balance in the whole performance, and the four soloists, though all accomplished musicians, never exceeded the limits of their semisoloistic parts.

Aaron Cohen...an encyclopaedic collection dealers throughout the world. Then he saw the possibilities of a "dictionary" of women composers. And from there it was only one step to the idea of an encyclopaedia.

Aaron Cohen has worked on his encyclopaedia for seven years. He has been in touch with more than 60 countries, East and West, from Argentina to Vietnam, Algeria to Yugoslavia. He has travelled widely, too, in search of his material. He was allowed to work in the Vatican City Library, and during a trip to Mexico he addressed the staff of the music department at the University of

In the course of his research, however, he found it less expensive to buy the available material when it came up than to travel about in search of it. He has, therefore, also accumulated a great collection of reference books in many languages.

How does he cope with language barriers? "I have translators of nearly every language you can name," he says. "Most of them are student musicians, some are librarians and others have a knowledge of languages, music or librarianship." He also has all the necessary equipment - including copying machines. Though he does not claim to have compiled the only work on women composers. Cohen points out that others deal only with contemporary

My first name is Iti of Egypt. going back to 2750 BCE." he says. There is a stone relief of her in Cairo. The first person named in the history of music is Hemre, leader of Pharach's orchestra. So she is actually the first known conductor."

Among Jewish women composers he includes Miriam (though her song may have been composed by Moses) and Deborah. There are, in fact, a. considerable number of names, Among the contemporary Israelis he includes are Yardena Alotin and Verdina Slonsky. Cohen says there are also many composers among Arab women, in cluding Jamila who, six centuries ago, had an orchestra of 50 women. She travelled with them to Mecca.

HE HAS not only listed the composers alphabetically for the encyclopaedia, but also chronologically — by country, profession, in-struments and musical forms. There is also a discography, a bibliography and more than 1,000 pictures.

"Everyone I have contacted has been helpful in virtually every country - except Russia," he says. Éven Libya was courteous, though the reply was that there were no women composers.

The Russians were different I wrote to Krenekov, head of Soviet composers, but received no answer. The information I have about Russian composers has come from other sources, like Poland. I have had to put the Russian composers under two headings - Russia before 1925 and the USSR."

Nevertheless. Aaron Cohen has achieved remarkable results about Russia. He has managed to obtain copies of the four volumes so far issued of the Russian music dictionary, of which there are very few gone down the drain." Any parent can finish the scenario. The details may vary, but the plot is unchangeable. What starts out as an adventure in education often ends up with the parent feeling disappointed tand the child feeling unfairly criticized. From what I can see, very often both are right.

What is more to the point is considering how can one prevent such things from going wrong. One must consider what happens between that exciting first rendition of "Twinkle, Twinkle Little Star" (with two hands) and the final bitter, "If you don't practise I'm not paying for any

As parents we all know that there is a vast gap between our expectations and our children's achievements, and that all of us live with disappointments and failures, but I'm not concerned with accepting defeat gracefully, but rather with maximizing the chances for success. In this case, success is the achievement of a certain level of musical proficiency — a level of competency that will be pleasurable to the child, since we are not discussing genius or careers, but just elementary musical education.

No one can know when Susie starts playing the piano how it is all going to end. The only "givens" are that Papa is willing to pay and Susie wild-ly eager. In fact, the little devil may have initiated the whole business by a passionate attachment to the neighbour's plane and shown great virtuesity by picking out a tune.

So a piano is bought, a teacher engaged and a new star launched. In the beginning, it is no hardship to transport Susie to her lessons, to arrange practice time that doesn't interfere with the baby's nap or to be suitably enthusiastic about each new And in this "piece" lies the first pitfall, as I see it.

The new selection implies that Susie has mastered the intricacies of the preceding-one — the catch being that the reward for a job well done is another job. As Susie's progress slows, as it must to cope with pieces of increasing difficulty, parental enthusiasm over new additions to the repertoire is less frequently expressed. Therefore, for a parent to express approval and encouragement related to what the child is playing could be self-defeating. What and how the child plays should be a concern of his teacher.

If and when Susie masters a piece and is given a chance to "perform," that is a very nice plus, but the focus should be on the fun of having the chance to explore and play with sounds and rhythms just_for the sheer joy in it. The principle applies whether one is teaching reading, numbers or embroidery. The first emphasis should be on the pleasure of doing, rather than on the achievement. For the young child, if the achievement (here the proof of achievement is the new piece) is too difficult or too long delayed, she will be discouraged and figure it just isn't worth the trouble.

. For the middle-grade child (aged 9 to 12), there is often another factor. He is no longer so in need of constant encouragement, at least not in words. Practising, however is a lonely occupation. It is important to him that his parents understand and empathize with this private activity. To stand close by for a bit so he can know you're listening, to give him an ing so he can talk about his playing, to keep the baby off his back during practice are ways in which you let him know that what he's doing is important to you, as well as to titudes. This is the age when friends and groups are terribly important to the child (when I was a student, age 9 was always characterized as the "gang" stage), and music lessons are sometimes far more desirable when they are a group activity. A youngster who looks forward to playing with a youth orchestra or band is highly motivated to practise. In fact. many children ask to change to an instrument facilitating such participation. For the sam: reasons a student would rather play pop than Bach. Some parents have strong feelings about this, especially when the child seems to be progressing nicely. Sometimes parents can be arbitrary about such a decision and for reasons that have to do only with their own concept of what is fitting.

DOESN'T a parent ever assert himself? Sure! When that young teenager, approaching what I call the sophomore slump, reacting to social and school pressures outside of the home, is surly and contrary in-side it. He decides that he's had enough of the piano lessons, despite the fact that he's just one year away from the conservatory certificate.

At this age you can't jolly him along with lavish praise; he doesn't need your company when he practises; and the only tool a parent has is his parental "authority." (Maybe, and maybe not, but you can't know until you try.) No one wants to be a nag, and since there is no law that any child has to have music lessons, it is all too easy to take the path of least resistance and say, "Okay, okay, so quit already and leave me in

In the normal course of growing up, children try many activities, only to discard them after a short trial. This hardly constitutes a family crisis. By the same token, not everyone needs, wants, or is privileged to get a musical education. In families where this is possible, parental understanding can enhance the chances for success. That means pleasure for the very young, your presence for the middlegrade child and whatever is necessary for the adolescent.

The only "no-no" as far as I'm concerned is talking about money and expenditure as either a prod or a penance. I think this is unfair, poor taste and just plain poor parenting. The family budget is a parental concern. If a family cannot afford certain activities or expenditures then the parents have an obligation to make this very plain to their children. Children can understand and accept this, and at an early age will cease asking for things which the parents can't afford.

But once the parent has accepted the financial obligations of music lessons, then that expenditure is his business and not the child's. To say to a ten-year-old, "I'm paying good money for these lessons, so you'd better practise or quit!" is to ensure that he will quit. To put a price tag on personal achievement is tantamount to putting a financial ticket on the child. If a child quits an activity because he finds he has little aptitude or interest, that's one thing. To guit because one's personal worth is not equal to the price of the lessons is humiliating.

For most children music is equated with happiness, and to be able to make music is a very special personal satisfaction. So put a smile on your face, plugs in your ears, and be sure to observe the 2-4 p.m. silence. And for as long as it lasts, have a happy time.

Campaign for Nazi records

By YA'ACOV FRIEDLER Jerusalem Post Reporter

MORE THAN 10 million files from the Third Reich may be handed over to the West German Government in 1981, and potentially embarrassing material may then "get lost," warns Tuvia Friedman, who heads the Nazi Crimes Documentation Centre in Friedman has started a campaign against the U.S. State Department transferring the records — personal files on 10.7 million Nazi Party members, including tens of thousands of SS and Gestapo officers involved in Hitler's "Final Solution" — and has appealed for help to U.S. Senator Jacob Javits. "I fear that in German hands the files may 'get lost' in order to prevent the embarrassment of former Nazis who now hold high positions in West German public life and industry." The files are kept in the West Berlin

"Documentation Centre," housed in a bunker in the Zehlendorf section of the city.

Negotiations between West German and American authorities on the transfer of the archive have been proceeding sporadically for 20 years, and the matter at times has been the subject of passionate public debate in West Germany. Recent press reports in Germany say there is a tentative agreement for the files to be turned over in 1981. Bonn has not been overly anxious to get the files, says Friedman, as many West German politicians fear that the 40 tons of drying paper are a potential Pandora's box and might reveal membership or other activity in the Nazi Party in the past of many now prominent Germans. The Americans do not appear to be in a great hurry to hand the files either, and even the Eastern bloc is known to prefer to let this particular sleeping dog lie, because the files, Friedman says, contain embarrassing information on the Nazi past of East German officials who are now Communist Party stalwarts.

Friedman has returned from a visit to the "Documentation Centre" in Berlin, where he met with its American director, Daniel Simon, who was recently quoted as saying that he believed that all concerned were quite willing to leave the files in the bunker and to wait for a "biological solution" to the problem. The average age of those in the files is 62, and in another 10 to 20 years most of them will be dead. The bunker where the files stand is surrounded by barbed wire and guarded at night by four guards with dogs. Bona fide researchers can obtain special permission from the Americans to peruse the files.

Friedman brought back photocopies of some of the most important files for his own documentation centre, where this reporter looked at them. They were meticulously kept, with even such minutiae as personal invitations to supper and birthday congratulations from highranking Nazis, details of conversations, certificates of "racial purity" and gossip — all hinting at the intrigues inside the Third Reich. One file, for instance, contains a lengthy complaint against Julius Streicher, who was the editor of the notorious anti-Semitic magazine "Der Stuermer" and was hanged after being sentenced at the Nuremberg War Crimes Trial. Streicher held Nazi Party membership card No.17, indicating he was one of the earliest supporters of Hitler. The complaint, filed in 1932 - even before the Nazis seized power — accuses him of brutal and boorish behaviour with a horsewhip towards another party stalwart.

Friedman has proposed that at least the 60,000 files of SS and Gestapo officers in the Berlin archives, and those of other high-ranking Nazis, be transferred to Washington, possibly to the Library of Congress, where they could be microfilmed for future use by historians and other researchers, and then the originals could be handed over to Bonn. He fears that a fire in the bunker where they now sit could quickly destroy the old and drying papers, stored in open racks. Originally the archives contained the files of all 12 million members of the Nazi Party, which had more card-carrying members than any party in history, an indication of the Germans' talent for organization and the fact that "very few Germans indeed," Friedman notes, did not join the party.

Just before the German collapse in 1945, the Nazis sent the files to the Munich factory of Hans Huber with orders to shred them to prevent the incriminating records from falling into Allied hands. Huber disobeyed, and thus most of the files were saved. The U.S. Army took hold of them, and they were transferred to the jurisdiction of the State Department in 1953.

Y. Federmann: issue one New Pound for every ten old ones Industrialist's economic cure

By YA'AOOV FRIEDLER Jerusalem Post Reporter

Yekutiel X. Federmann, the veteran hotelier and industrialist, would have been ready with a programme of his own to cure the economy, if the Finance Ministry had been offered to him, as was mooted by one paper recently.

He had "no comment," however when asked by The Post about the man who did get the job, Yigal Hurvitz. Federmann and Hurvitz were partners in the Ad-Nir ice cream factory at one time.

In Federmann's opinion, "the mood of national emergency Hurvitz wants to create to prepare people for the tackling of our economic ills is right." However, "the question is what economic strategy he will adopt and what tactics he will employ. The goals are stopping inflation and the weakening of the pound. along with stimulating the interest of foreign countries and investors in our industrial development," he

He elaborated that he would aim at holding inflation to 50 per cent "maximum" in the first stage. To this end he proposed replacing the currency by New Pounds, which would be issued at the rate of one for every current ten pounds. This would force black capital to surface and take advantage of an amnesty, "as was done in Switzerland." A 40 to 50 per cent income tax would be levied on this capital. Criminal proceedings would be waived on condition that the owners undertake in writing to refrain from dodging in future. Very heavy penalties for violations would be laid down. At the same time he would amend the law to provide much heavier penalties for income tax and VAT evasion.

Federman would use about IL10b. of the taxes collected for black capital for low-cost housing for young couples and immigrants.

Another law would make it mandatory to make every transaction above IL5.000 (New Pounds) solely through the banks. He would also raise VAT to 15 or 20 per cent, with a Federmann considers government example of modest living as easential to the success of any economic plan. "Switzerland has seven ministers, who travel by train, tram and bus, and only exceptionally in the half dozen official cars available. Yet. Switzerland is not doing so badly, he noted. He proposed cutting down our government to ten

"We are too poor to live the life of the rich. Continuing our life style of conspicuous consumption, both individually and officially, will break down morale and ruin the economy. The government must start restraining our life style by setting an example," he stressed.

With fewer ministers the government must tackle the urgent need of reducing the civil service and the entire public sector. Towards this goal he proposes offering early retirement to every employee in the public sector who reaches the age of 60. "It's better to pay them a pension than paying redundant staff which only creates general demoralisation and virtually assures that essential work won't get done," he said. In addition he would dismiss all ablebodied young persons in the public sector who do not have very special qualifications. Through incentives he would re-direct them into productive jobs.

"We must raise productivity and efficiency by at least 25 per cent in short order. This means we can't afford strikes. I'm not talking through my hat, I have done it in the many enterprises I head," the industrialist

What is needed is cooperation with the Histadrut and efficient management, Federmann continued. For this purpose the government should provide management guidance by a pool of experts. He noted that our agro-industry and its soaring exports were proof of what the country is capable of, and the farmers should be helped to increase their exports further. Europe in winter is hungry for the produce we can supply, he

Another goal that was both "essential and attainable" was to double all exports within three years. This goal could be promoted through incentives to industry, including cheap, subsidised, harbour and freight charges, and reduced income taxes on export profits. Federmann would also foster the export of local knowhow through tax incentives.

Federmann also proposed ending the right of citizens to purchase $3,-000 to satisfy their hunger for foreign currency. Instead he would issue government dollar bonds bearing four per cent less interest than that paid in the Euromarket. For those travelling abroad he would keep the $3,000 allocation, but only on production of the air ticket, which would be stamped to make a double allowance impossible.

He would also introduce a hefty tax on luxury items, such as big cars and household equipment, as was done in Brazil.

"I believe we can bring about a change," he said. We are as sick economically as Europe was after the last war, and they took the cure. A sick person needs professional treatment and not politics. Towards that goal I have suggested to the Prime Minister the appointment of a 12-man public council for curing our economic malaise. Its members would be professionals drawn from every sector and they would advise the Prime Minister, rather like a war council, because we must declare war on economic mismanagement.

One of the persons he has put on his "possible" list for the council is himself. Certainly his record is impressive. He was one of the first to forge partnerships with American and European investors here. His Israel-Miami group was the first to strike oil (with Lapidot) at the

The GATT report explained that these consumption trends appear largely due to the fact that the sharp price increase of crude petroleum since 1973 led to relatively smaller hikes in petrol than in other products at consumer level.

Thus it said between 1973 and 1978 retail prices of petrol rose by about 50 per cent in the U.S., 25-40 per cent in Switzerland, Belglum, West Germany and the Netherlands. 100 per cent in Britain and Japan. A 200 per cent hike in Italy was largely due to the devaluation of its currency.

By contrast, the report said, price increases for fuel oil used in industry and for gas or diesel oil used in the domestic sectors were generally two to three times higher.

In real terms - when deflated by the index increse of consumer price retail prices of petrol either declined or rose only slightly in most European countries and in the U.S., it explained

In the more recent years, petrol consumption in industrialized states rose by 3.2 per cent in 1977 and 8.4 per cent in 1978, to a total of 575 happened to the 1979 U.S. recession? Well, it didn't happen in 1979, at least not yet. Evidence continues to accumulate that the economy is turning up, not down, as the year draws The Index of Economic Indicators that came out last week was up by 0.8 per cent, the biggest advance in 14 months. Factory orders for September, also reported last week, rose 3.9 per cent, the most in a

The growth in the economy has frustrated efforts to curb inflation. Wholesale prices increased another 1 per cent in October, the government said last week.

Unemployment rose slightly last month, to 6 per cent, but was still lower than anyone would have predicted a few months ago. And employment increased by 305,000, a business survey showed

The economy, in fact, is looking downright robust.

"It's the case of the missing recession. It's out there somewhere, but nobody can find it," says Charles L. Schultze, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Adbehaving in response to economic weakness as it used to," Lyle E. Gramley, a council member, said in an interview.

Gramley said one reason for con-

"The economy is simply not tinued growth is that consumers are result of being motivated by in-flationary expectations."

Treasury Secretary G. William Miller, who declared in September that the nation was in a recession, and that it was half over, says the economy is giving off "false signals." But he has retracted his half-over statement. . Miller wasn't the only one who was fooled. A sizeable 2.4 per cent increase in the nation's gross national product in the third quarter caught nearly everyone off guard, including most private forecasters. George Perry, an economist at the Brookings Institution, who also thought a recession was under way. said the most surprising economic statistics were the September home-building figures, which showed housing starts at an annual rate of 1.9 million during the month.

"Everybody underestimated housing and how strong it would be, even with the high interest rates of summer," he said.

It is generally accepted that the nation's GNP, the value of total output of goods and services in the economy, including housing, must decline for at least two consecutive quarters for a recession to occur.

The GNP had declined at a 2.3 per cent rate in the second quarter, and just about everyone had taken it as a foregone conclusion that the third quarter GNP would decline as well.

U.S. firm to build $425m. Dead Sea potash plant for Jordanian company

PASADENA (AP). — The Jacobs Engineering Group Inc. and the Arab Potash Company Ltd. signed a landmark, seven-year pact Monday for a $425m. Dead Sea potash recovery project currently under way in Jordan.

The contract, which will extend through May 1986, is believed to involve the largest and most complex project ever undertaken in the Mid-dle East. It was signed at a ceremony held at Jacobs' world headquarters by Ali Khasawneh, chairman and general manager of the Arab Potash Company, and Dr. Joseph J. Jacobs, chairman of the board and chief executive officer of Jacobs Engineering.

Under terms of the agreement the project will be supervised by Jacobs International Ltd., a Dublin-based division of Jacobs Engineering. The project is designed to recover annually 1.2 million metric tons of potash, a major ingredient in mixed fertilizer, from the Dead Sea.

Included in the project is the construction of 40 square miles of solar evaporation ponds, one of the largest industrial applications of solar energy ever undertaken.

Jacobs International is also constructing a permanent township to house nearly 800 operating and maintenance personnel. A power plant and a potash processing plant will also be built.

Mass selling of linked bonds continues

TEL AVIV. — A bargain basement at-mosphere prevailed in the index-linked bond market yesterday as massive offers were calmly absorbed by the representative of the Bank of Israel. In view of this strong support, prices remained unchanged. Along the way IL 372.5m. worth of bonds were traded and thus an all-time one-session turnover high was established.

If one looked for the destination of the funds realized from the sale of bonds, it could be found in the foreign currency departments of the various commercial banks. The queues had formed bright and early, as clients were baying foreign currency, preferably cash. It was not unusual for several members of one family to come to the counter and ask for the maximum $3,000 allowance in cash.

This move is prompted by the wave of rumours about the possibility of a major devaluation and a return to foreign currency controls. The net result was that the Israel pound was devalued by 30 agorot, or nearly

Among the three majors, Hapoalim (R) was ahead by two, but Leumi and IDB managed gains of only one point. General Bank came through with three points, while Mizrahi and FIBI were onepoint risers. Union continued unchanged.

Among mortgage bank issues Carmel (B) was up by 7 per cent and Tefahot pref. (B) rose by 4 per cent. The majority of the shares in the group came through with gains.

Insurance stocks were mixed, Yardenia ILI rose by nearly 5 per cent, but the ILS shares were down by more than 4 per cent. Ararat IL1 rose by 4.4 per cent while the IL5 shares were losing 3.5 per cent.

Service and utility securities trended lower. Lighterage IL5 lost 8.1 per cent, while the ILI shares were down by 5 per cent. Motor House retreated by 80 points, to 570. Delek (b) moved against the trend as it rose by 10 points, to 222, Land development and real estage shares were down on the session. Solel Boneh A shares lost nearly 6 per cent. However, other shares in the group declined by much smaller Industrials put in a mixed performance. Dead Sea Works were a good feature as they checked in with a 26-point rise, to 546. Lodgia ILI, on the other hand, was clipped for a 32point loss, to 768. Polygon retreated and was down by 4.2 per cent, but Rim IIA gained 4.6

A number of major losers appeared in an otherwise mixed investment company group. Elgar (B) fell by 70 points, reflecting a loss of 9.5 per cent. The Elgar registered shares lost almost 5 per cent. Investment of Paz (B) was hit for a 5 per cent loss, while the registered shares retreated by 6 per cent. Clai Industries backtracked by 14 points, to 306. Piryon lost 6.3 per cent, to 125.5.

A malady called occupation

THE GUSH EMUNIM settlers at Eilon Moreh are still talking of a direct showdown with the Government over their scheduled removal, in compliance with the High Court ruling last month. Yesterday the Ministerial Defence Committee, at a meeting boycotted by the Gush's unofficial Cabinet attorney, Agriculture Minister Arik Sharon, decided to authorize Defence Minister Ezer Weizman to discuss with the settlers alternative sites for a new Eilon Moreh somewhere in Samaria,

The settlers' own instantaneous response was to reaffirm their unalterable resolve not to budge an inch. Except, that is, from the precise 125 dunams owned by the petitioners in the court case, and which alone (out of a total of 700 dunams) are specifically to be vacated. Moreover, they contend they have already done so.

This is a cute thesis, but the settlers must know it is bogus. That is why they, the Gush Emunim leaders, and their supporters outside, notably in and around the newly founded Renascence Party, are plumping so heavily for legislation, or better yet an executive declaration, transfiguring Judea,

Samaria and Gaza from occupied into non-occupied territories. That will remove the incubus of the Hague regulations from these areas, and it will make privately-owned land (and not only state and unregistered — and uncultivated — land) fit for expropriation to serve a "public purpose": the purpose of Jewish

The idea has not so far been endorsed by Mr. Begin, but neither has it been rejectded out of hand. Perhaps a proper wrapping is now being sought for this can of worms, that will half-disguise its true contents.

Assailed as it is today from nearly every political corner, Gush Emunim may, therefore, have reason to feel elated. If digging in their heels on the nondescript hill at the entrance to Nablus were to yield them the virtual annexation of the "heart of the nation," dense as it is with Arabs, then pulling out at the last moment would, in their view, not be too grievous a loss.

Within six months or so the Arab inhabitants of the territories are supposed to begin exercising the rights of autonomy. By then, however, so Gush Emunim professes to believe, Judea and Samaria will have been so heavily spread over with irremovable Jewish settlements, however diminutive, that the development of the autonomy into anything else but eventual

Israel sovereignty could effectively be barred. This would not be the dreadful illusion that it is if Israel, and the Palestinians, were alone in the world. The trouble is that they are not. How a friendly part of the world views the issue may be gleaned from a report on Middle East policy just published by a distinguished panel of the Atlantic Council, in

While on the whole following the U.S. government's lead, the panel, made up largely of former senior officials, takes the liberty to recommend "informal contacts" between the U.S.

This, too, is in essence but a preview of the emerging American policy. The independent status of the panel members, only one of whom could at all be described as hostile to this country, will certainly help the White House and the Department of State secure popular approval for a push in that direc-

Is this seeming Palestinian obsession something that Israel can safely ignore or dismiss on the grounds that it is motivated, in some part, by oil, strategy, anti-Semitism — and even annoyance with guilt over the Holocaust?

The fact is that it also stems from the indubitable rise of a Palestinian nation in the territories under Israel's occupation, and a direct result of that occupation. To assure the Palestinians' right to nationhood, and from the threat of permanent Israeli dominion, a state of some sort, even under PLO rule, may not appear as too frivolous a proposition from the vantage point of Washington.

If there is anything that reinforces this line of thinking, it is the identification of a tiny band of self-appointed Jewish messiahs, preaching the supremacy of the territorial imperative and breathing a Herrenvolk ideology.

The failure of many Israelis to appreciate the damage to Israel from mistaking the Gush Emunim travesty with the genuine Zionist vision, is itself due to the acceptance of occupation as somehow inexorable.

Military occupation tends to corrupt; prolonged occupation may corrupt irremediably.

Needed: an incomes policy

THE ISRAEL economy appears to be heading for a fall: the fat is already in the fire. This is likely to happen even if the government were to accept the "consensus" that has been drummed into the public's ears by officials, journalists, bankers. businessmen - and even a good many economists.

This "consensus" tells us that the ever-escalating inflationary spiral results simply from excessive governmental expenditure - or, sometimes, from an excessive government fiscal deficit (i.e., demand surplus over taxation). The prescription derived from this analysis is that the government must 'cut the budget," and keep on cutting it radically. But until when?

One answer is until all excess demand has been wiped out; according to another, until public expenditure has been reduced to a certain (or rather uncertain) low percentage of

The truth is somewhat different. Israel's inflation stems from a mixture of demand and cost-push

EVERY STATISTICAL test points to the fact that the demand component is primarily determined by the growth of the stock of money and only secondarily by changes in government expenditure or demandsurplus. The size or level of the demand surplus (i.e., expenditures less tax revenue) is one, but only one, of the sources of growth in the money supply (i.e., the money created by the Bank of Israel to finance the demand surplus not covered by bond sales: in a word, the so-called "in-

The sheer size or level of the demand-surplus, based on borrowing from the public (i.e., from the sale of linked bonds), does not progressively inflate the level of de(especially wage) rises in a given year are fixed by what happened to

There is a notion among the public that, since bonds are very much like money, their increased sales produce a massive additional in-flationary effect. But the bonds are not any more liquid (i.e., like money) than savings accounts, which they have tended to displace. Moreover, they substitute for private securities, which would grow in greater profusion if the govern-ment deficit and bond sales did not

Thus policy-makers can cut aggregate demand (or spending) even without cutting government ex-penditure by reducing bank credit to the public; or by inducing, through higher interest rates, an increase in the sale of linked bonds. Indeed, if these, and other monetary measures are not taken, or their reverse allowed, then cuts in government expenditure (and in money creation for such expenditure) may have no

In actual fact, the economy is tending towards a slowdown in demand right now, because money growth has been sharply reduced during 1979 — by all these (and some other)

IF THE COUNTRY'S problems were merely one of demand inflation, this would be the end of the matter. Unfortunately, however, inflation has a "cost-push" aspect as well, and this aspect complicates the appropriate treatment. A large part of the costpush problem involves the fact that, to a considerable degree, cost prices in the preceding year — both by formal linkages, and by negotiated rises based upon past inflation experience.

Simple belt-tightening by the government will not be a panacea for the ills of inflation, writes RICHARD ABLIN.

The effect is that a slowing of nominal demand (or total spending) by means of tight monetary policy will coincide with a continuing wageprice rise. Thus it will produce a large decline in quantities purchased, but very little slowing of price inflation in the first year or so. Subsequently, the slackening of demand will be reflected in new wage settlements and will produce a slowing of price inflation. But real demand will only slowly recover over several years. This is the probable scenario if the requirement of incomes policy is ignored, and reliance is placed (in the traditional manner of Western conservatism in Zurich, London or New York) entirely upon demand restraint.

THE CHALLENGE, therefore, for, a rational society is to combine de-mand disinflation with a coordinated incomes policy, so as to prevent, or very much lessen, the real recessionary effect.

The core of this involves restraining nominal wage increases. There are a variety of possible ways of doing this. For example, one would be to have the government, employers and unions all in a "package deal" involving an emergency programme of progressive reduction of nominal wage rises (that is, a temporary suspension of the cost-of-living wage link), together with the promise that price inflation will fall in parallel policy cannot be exactly timed, it may be necessary to back up this promise with a programme of temporary price controls to ensure its success on schedule — and hence its acceptability.

Since the effect of tight demand

Much the same result could be achieved by a seemingly very different approach as well. This would be to tighten the present formal linkage of wages to the price index by raising it to, say, 100 per cent and by increasing the frequency as much as possible, say to monthly adjustments. However, additional average wage rises, even traditional "wage creep," would have to be excluded during the emergency programme of disinflation.

Then the government could apply demand disinflation with or without price controls. Reduction of nominal demand (e.g., via tight money) would then almost simultaneously reduce the inflation of both prices and wages. (A dramatic version of this approach could take the form of a controlled treeze of all prices, which would immediately, after one month, stop the further rise of nominal wages. The problem is that it is hardly possible to arrange that nominal demand inflation would also fall to zero so suddenly.)

In practice, the growth rate of money could be progressively cut, but this would mean employing controls to guard against the inertia of other price increases — besides nominal wages — which enter into costs. These, too, are partly determined by expectations, and might therefore, by slowing less rapidly than nominal demand, cause some real recession, despite the near elimination of the direct inertia (due to the tight wage-price link) in the case of wages.

THE UNFORTUNATE side of setting controlled price targets is that it might result in some degree of short; run disequilibrium (Le., shortages. if we have overestimated the speed at which nominal demand is likely to fall). But I believe that despite this, the policy as a whole could achieve a rapid return to price atability without serious recession. In each of these particular income policies, the general principle is to break the cycle in which wages and other cost rises are determined by expectations based upon the previous trend of inflation. This principle can be seen most clearly by positing an extreme technique of stopping inflation (which I do not now recommend).

This was the approach used to stop various hyper-inflations (e.g., Germany in 1923), with little recessionary effect.

In this approach, the government amounces that, at a specific date. the existing currency must be converted into a new one, and that the quantity of the new currency (unlike the old) will subsequently grow at a non-inflationary rate. Hence, all contracts should be made on the expectation that the new currency will not lose value - namely, that the (new) price level will cease to rise forthwith.

Strangely enough, this simple, if radical, technique, which sounds like a mere conjuring trick, actually works. By this means the "magic" link of wages and other costs to expectations based upon past inflation can be (and has been) broken, and the flight of nominal demand brought to a halt — without plunging the economy into serious recession.

TRAVELLING BY EL AL

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir. — After many trips via El Al, I would like to tell you what travelling by El Al means to me. It means that I am to understand from the moment I purchase my ticket that I must not make any specific plans in advance at the place of destination, since this will cause me undue expense phoning and telegraphing friends, family, hotels and business associates cancelling all carefully made arrangements and having to settle for last minute, grab what's available substitutes when I do finally arrive, hopefully at the destination I originally chose.

El Al means that I must exhaust myself before boarding the aircraft, so that I will have no desire to move once wedged into my seat, since movement will mean enormous agility to disengage from a seat that was purposefully designed to hold passengers firmly in place so that the crew does not need to deal with

THE RAMADA SHALOM

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, - I have just come back from a visit to Israel during which we had the occasion of staying in different hotels in the country. Some were better and some worse. But I believe the Ramada Shalom in Jerusalem is about everything a hotel should not

It is not clean, the service is bad; if you do not happen to have a car, you have to climb about three flights of stairs to get out of the hotel. On top of that, the prices for extras are exhorbitant.

Israeli hotels are known not to be cheap the last three years, but if they want to drive the tourists away, they should go on giving four or five stars to hotels which do not know what service means.

Antwerp, Belgium.

The Ministry of Industry, Commerce and Tourism replies:

The supervisor of tourist services in our ministry informs me that our office planned to bring up the subject of cleanliness and service at the Hotel Council meeting in August. The Council discussed the matter and agreed to give the hotel management until February 15, 1980, to correct the situation. Should remedial action not be taken by then, all measures authorized by the law will be carried out.

As far as overcharging is concerned, there is no control on the prices of extras and we can therefore do nothing about them.

HELPING THE FALASHAS

Sir, - Your attack on "key orthodox functionaries" of the National Religious Party as being responsible through their "narrow dogmatism and bigotry" for the failure to bring the Falashas to this country (your leader of October 30) is a remarkable example of editorial

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

As far back as 1955, the Department for Torah Education of the Jewish Agency took a leading role in reaching out to the Falashas with a view to speeding their integration into the life of Israel and its people. Groups were received at Kiar Batya and a centre for their education was set up at Asmara under the direction of Rabbi Samuel Beart, then Chair-man of the Religious Council of Sarad. If these efforts led nowhere, the fault did not-lie with the religious leadership which was, if anything, more zealous than other groups on behalf of these poer Jewish outcasts. It should be noted also that Dr. Jacques Faitlovotch, who more than 70 years ago first brought the plight of the Falashas to the notice of Jewry, was himself an observant Jew movto his fellow Jews.

Nor is this spirit at an end today. You recently published an article by Dr. Shalva Weil on the Pathans - a tribe of several millions living near what used to be the Northwest Frontier of India. Though nominally Moslem, their life-style reveals a large number of Jewish or quasi-Jewish customs and there seems to be impressive historical evidence of their link with the Jewish people, sufficient at least to warrant serious inquiry. This was long ago noted by aware, the only group active at present in drawing attention to the Pathans is led by Rabbi Eliahu Avihayil, supported in this instance by Rabbis Goren and Z.J. Kook. These are people whom you would probably describe as "bigots and dogmatists.'' One awaits a response from the general (i.e. non-religious) community commensurable to the size of the issue and its possible

CALL FOR A SMILE

Sir, - With very rare exceptions, tourists come to Israel because they want to come. Why is a smile at such a premium? Why is a pleasant greeting not found? Everyone is painfully aware of the struggle of Israel. Everyone is awed by the remarkable progress made in such a short period. But surely hostility toward visitors does nothing to mitigate the struggle of Israel. I wonder whether it is realized that, for thousands of tourists, the hotel staff is the face of Israel. And when that face is sullen, unpleasant, grasping, it becomes a national characteristic. Not every tourist has the pleasure of having an Israeli friend or relative, so it is assumed that all Israelis must be like those staff members.

The tourist income of Israel figures importantly in the national economy. I think self-examination by the tourist industry would be most valuable. EDITH BIENSTOCK

A RECENTLY published volume of Chaim Weizmann's letters records what must surely be the longest academic leave in history. On December 18, 1939 Dr. Weiz-

mann wrote to Sir Montagu Butler, the Master of Pembroke College, Cambridge, where a young don. Abba Eban, was lecturing and doing research in Arabic and Persian literature. Dr. Weizmann wrote that Eban "is spending his vacation in London working in the office of the Jewish Agency where his cooperation is proving extremely valuable. Circumstances have now arisen which make it extremely desirable that he should continue here for several weeks longer, and I am writing to ask whether you could arrange to release him for some part of the coming term from his College

The learned editor of the letters observes that Sir Montagu acceded to this request. The official position 40 years later is that Abba Eban is on temporary leave and his class on Arabic classical poetry is presumably expecting his gowned figure to sweep into the lecture room at any moment.
